Delta Downs

It turns out You could have had every winner on this card except one (LEFTHOOFRIGHTHOOF) just by using the first two horses in the AVG SPD/ASP 110 columns. However, I've included all the information below to show you how I go through the handicapping process using the HorseSheets. As I've said many times, you must always use the top two AVG SPD/ASP 110 horses unless there's an inescapable reason for you not to. And even when that reason exists, you should always also use those top two in horizontal as your budget indicates. Below you'll see my attempts to find a horse that might run with the top two.

This card was run on a muddy track. You can't let that fact dominate your handicapping, but it's always intelligent to look at the horses' records and breeding as a bit of insurance, to see if it might hurt or help. If you have a horse that's 0 for 9 in the mud, for example, you might be somewhat suspicious of his chances. If you have a horse with a mud speed figure that's above everyone else in the race, you might move his chances up a bit or disregard the mud entirely. I don't put mud figures in the HorseSheets; I get them online, usually from Brisnet's ultimate pp's.

It was a reasonably profitable day for the HorseSheets for just picking a card and handicapping it. This is a great example of the power of the average speed columns. One of the top two horses at the top of those columns won 8 of the card's 10 races.

FIRST RACE

You'll find lot of tracks and races where speed figures are king with the crowd, who choose to ignore pace, last race, etc., etc. This is a great example. Delta always favors early speed. Looking at it from that viewpoint, we see the #8 is first in the SYS1 column and first in the CLOSE column, with competitive speed figures. He won, even though the #4, with the highest speed rating, went off the favorite.

SECOND RACE

A giveaway. This time the speed figures and the pace came together. #7 is tops in average speed, and first in the SYS1 column, first in TOTALS, and first or second in the other important categories. She won, only paid $2.80 because the crowd couldn't miss her, and the double paid $5.80. Not bad for a cinch $1 bet.

THIRD RACE
 The #10 in this maiden race has a 1.7 in the SYS1 column, making it an almost automatic bet in anything but a maiden race in which none of the experienced runners have shown they can run. I know it's Delta Downs, but a highest speed figure for the race of 54 doesn't inspire any kind of confidence. I don't want to bet this race because there are so many unknowns. So I peek at pick 3 payoffs and find the #2 is basically an overwhelming favorite. Obviously because she has the highest speed figure. So here we go off the grid. I have a pick three with the two, seven, and four in this race. I included the #2 to get my money back in case someone on Delta Downs backside knew something I didn't. Let's see what happens. Cool. The #7 barely beat the #10 (who went off the favorite - 3rd off a layoff and dropping in class). I didn't like the #10 because she'd already run a below par race; I thought a first-timer had an excellent shot to win. The pick three paid $25.65 - a really good payoff for my $3 ticket.

FOURTH RACE
 Once again we have a horse with a number lower than 2 in the SYS1 column: the #9. And once again, the makes him almost an automatic bet. So let's check out the field. The #9 is pretty low in all categories, including the early pace in his last race, in which he evidently didn't have any trouble and faded at the end. The #7 and #8 have the highest speed figures for this distance and surface; the #4 and #8 are the best closers. #8 and #6 are moving from turf to dirt. The #3 is tied for average speed with the #7 and #8, is dropping, and has the best TOTL PACE LAST and BEST LAST figures. He is also moving in from the outside, and is second in the TDONE column. Unfortunately, the crowd (or the big boys with the supercomputers) found him and bet him down to 3-5, making him not worth a bet for me. He won, and paid a measly five bucks. The exacta with the #9, who the HorseSheets had as the top early speed horse, paid a decent $20, and the one dollar double paid a pretty generous $24.70. The pick four, which was almost a gimme, paid $64.65.

FIFTH RACE

You have to at least look at the #7, tops in the SYS1 and AVG SPD columns, but it's a 7f maiden, so you need to be careful. She also has the highest speed figure, and the highest BEST LAST figure, although she's only second in the TOTL PACE LAST column. If anyone is going to beat her, I'm thinking it might possibly be one of the big droppers, but they're all so slow I can't imagine them winning. I don't see anyone beating her. Turns out the #3 gave the #7 a good battle at 27 to one, but the #7 prevailed. Why did the #3 show up? I honestly don't know, except she was dropping a bit, switching turf to dirt (on dirt for the first time) and coming off a layoff. I didn't see her, but the exacta paid a comparatively robust $25.

SIXTH RACE

At a glance, we see the #2 horse has a 1.6 total in SYS1, making her definitely someone to look at, since we're still looking for someone other than the chalk to bet on. Her speed figures are fairly competitive, and dropping tiny bit off of a 3 month layoff with okay works. She also happens to be one of seven early speed horses in the race, with only two "closers." The #6 and the #9. The 8, 9, and 10 have pretty overwhelmingly the BEST LAST figures, meaning we have to consider them. The #9 and #10 have the best average speed figures at this distance and surface, and at four minutes to post are the first and second favorites. The #10 is also second in SYS1, so must be considered. The #8, however, has the best last race figures in both columns, competitive speed figures, is tops in TOTALS, and is 7-1 on the board. Looks like a win bet, except she won her last race, is coming off a layoff, and staying put in class. Can't do it. But I will put her in the exotics. The #2 is 4-1; I'll include her, too. I'll also include the #9 and #10 just as a saver. Let's see what happens. Big disappointment: the #10 won the race at 3-5, with the #8 second. The 2,5, and 7 got out early, with the #10 on their shoulders. They wore themselves out, and the 10 and 8 closed to the wire. Payoffs were insignificant.

RACE SEVEN

The #4 looks like the best early speed horse, first in SYS1, lowest in CLOSE, and highest in P2F. A legitimate wire threat, we might think. Won a race at Canterbury in her last, now moves up, is 2 for 4 at Delta, and gets Thornton, one of the very top jocks at Delta. Which means she'll probably go off the favorite. A look at the board tells us she's posted at even money in the early betting. Phooey. Can anyone beat her? Let's see. The #2 is coming off a win, moving to post 2 from post 7, and obviously has great connections (Saenz stays). She also just won her last race, is a good closer, has the best last race figures, and is 3-1 on the board. The #7 and #10 have the highest average speed figures, and the #7 and #8 have the highest average speed figures at this distance and surface; the #8 has only race ATDS, the #7 has 7. It's 6.5 furlongs, there is enough early speed that the #4 might get in a duel and wear out, which makes the #7, the best closer and a great mudder with the best speed rating, a possible at 7-1, except a closer hasn't won all night. The #3 obviously also likes the mud, as her three for five win average shows. I don't like the #2 or #4 at their odds, so the #7 might be the only possible win bet for me – except she's a closer on an early speed track. I'll pass. Surprise: we finally found our longshot – except we weren't smart enough to bet her. The #3 won and paid $31.00, coming in on top of the #2 and #10. Drat.

RACE EIGHT
 It's a 5f race, and #6 has very competitive speed figures and is first in SYS1 with the best CALL 2 number. She won her last race, in the mud, has Melancon up, and looks really good except for winning his last race and stepping up in class. Is she good enough? Maybe, but my money won't be on her. We'll use the 10 and 11, of course, since they're the top speed fig horses and top BEST ALL horses. We can't use the last race figures because many of these horses ran in sprints where there was no P4F figure. Bottom line: we'll just use the #10 and #11 in that order, because we don't have enough to go on for the other horses. The #10 won; the #11 came in second.

RACE NINE
 The #8 has the second highest AVG SPD (with a bunch of others) and the highest ASP 110, making him a legitimate contender at 8-1 in the early odds. The #1 has some early speed (2ND CALL figure). The #5 ran a turf sprint in his last, so is missing the P4F figure, but is even money in the morning line. He won his last race against tougher and is 3rd off a layoff; he's a closer with the second best BEST ALL figure (with the #1), so we can see why the morning line guy loves him. I don't, however. If he wins, I'll clap and cheer for him, but he won't be carrying any of my money except, perhaps, in the exotics. The #1 evidently hates the mud, but you can't rely on that. When all else fails, my policy is just to go with the AVG SPD/ASP 110. They came in just as advertised: 1, 4, 8, for very little money. The #5 ran just behind the #1 early, then faded.

RACE TEN

The way things have gone, you'd think just putting some money on the top AVG SPD/ASP 110 horses would be the way to go, and maybe it would be. We'll see. The #7 shows up at 6-5 at first flash, which makes sense, since it's tops in just about every category but is coming off a layoff. The #5 is second in the AVG SPD column, which automatically makes him a contender, especially at the morning line odds of 8-1, and especially with the jockey switch to Diego Saenz, a 24% jock. The #1 ships in from LAD for good connections, and moves from the 11-hole to the 1-hole. That's pretty much an automatic bet for me, without thinking too much about it. So I'll bet the #1 to win and not worry about it. The #3 and #6 are both under 2 in the TDONE column, but each have only one race under their belt at this distance and surface. The #6 evidently ran the best last race. I usually don't bet maidens because there's not enough information, but this one has one of my favorite angles at decent odds: the #1, whose odds have come down to 5-1 from the morning line of 10-1. Finally – the #7 looks like the best horse, but who knows how it will run after the layoff; the #1 has my angle, although his past races don't look like much and there's a lot of other speed. Bravely, however, I will struggle to the window and place my wrinkled, dog-eared dollar bills on the #1. I might even take a shot and do an exacta with the 1,7,5 exacta box, which would cost me six bucks. (Which I eventually did, just for the heck of it, even though I don't bet exactas. It was the last race, what the heck.) Well, the #5 won at 12-1. The #7 finished second. The #1 came in third. Why in the frick didn't I play the 1,5,7 trifecta box, putting the HorseSheets top two numbers with my favorite angle? Just didn't get around to it, and the fact is I really, really, really don't play trifectas except in the rarest circumstances. Anyway, the #5 went off 12-1, the #7 went off 1-5, and the #1 went off at 11-1. The exacta only paid $20, but not bad return for a six dollar bet. The double, which I didn't bet, paid $21.
